Supporting and Feeding Our Healthcare Workers on the Frontline Fighting COVID-19

We have all heard the reports about what our healthcare workers are facing as they treat and care for the flood of COVID-19 patients. And we all want to help!

Georgetown women Linda Austin and Rosemary Crossfield started working 3 weeks ago to find out what our local hospital healthcare workers would like for us to do for them.

The answer: What we appreciate the most is having good food delivered, something we can grab and go, not have to think about, and get back to our patients.

Through the help of others, engaging with hospitals, Georgetown restaurants who can prepare and deliver the food, and the support of several local churches to spread the word, a new ministry was born: Sandwiches for Saints.

The project is a win-win-win: Support for frontline healthcare workers, assisting local small business, and allowing those of us who want to help the opportunity to give back.

To begin, trays of sandwiches will be sent to the day and night shifts at Georgetown St. David's Hospital, Baylor, Scott & White Round Rock, and Seton Williamson, once or twice per week. The anticipated starting date will be perhaps as early as Tuesday, March 31. Approximately 225 sandwiches will be served at each delivery date. The cost will range from $4-6 per sandwich. As the fund grows, so will the frequency of food deliveries.

There are no administrative costs to this volunteer effort. Grace Episcopal Church has generously agreed to absorb all administrative costs associated with collecting the funds through their website and disbursing funds for reimbursement to Linda and Rosemary. Every penny donated will go directly to feeding these healthcare workers.
